

THIRD EDITION

MARCH, APRIL, MAY

March, April and May are the arches of a bridge which bind the seasons of ice to that of roses. Therefore spring is a trying time for the average person. McKANE'S METHODS.

Intimations of Defalcation on Electric Lighting and License Funds.

BROOKLYN, March 15.—Lawyer George F. Elliott, counsel for the citizens' committee of Gravesend, who is helping the committee to investigate the finances of Gravesend, will apply to the supreme court and make a demand on John Y. McKane or his assistants for permission to inspect the books and papers of McKane.

If he succeeds in getting these documents the information will be used later when the action will be brought on the part of the taxpayers against the town officials of Gravesend. Mr. Elliott claims that Controller O'Rourke, S. S. Williamson and James McKane, brother of the ex-chief, have the books he wants to inspect.

The contract price for the electric light plant was $110,000, and the records show that McKane drew a requisition for $200,000, alleging that that sum was to be put in the building and plant. The sum was allowed on the requisition, and on this requisition McKane drew out at different times the sum of $23,000. The sum of $23,000 was paid just before election. The court will be asked by the committee to investigate what work was done on this plant. The question now is whether the requisition was not $23,000 too much.

If the saloons on Coney Island all paid in a license the sum would amount to $14,000 a year, but Counselor Elliott says he has discovered that all that was turned in the county treasury was $3,500. It is also said that some of the saloon keepers had to pay exorbitant demands to run their places.

Only the Stars and Stripes.

BROOKLYN, March 15.—Mayor Schiren expresses himself as fully determined to maintain the position he has taken in refusing to allow the flag to be raised on the city hall on St. Patrick's Day, notwithstanding the resolution passed at the recent meeting of the board of aldermen. Without his approval the resolution is inoperative, and the passage of the resolution over his veto cannot be done until ten days have elapsed. Mayor Schiren says he is actuated only by what he believes to be the spirit of true Americanism. No other country would consent to have the Stars and Stripes hoisted on a public building on the 17th of July, and he could not consistently allow any flag other than the Stars and Stripes to be raised.

Confirmed with a Proviso.

WASHINGTON, March 15.—The senate confirmed the nomination of J. Marshall Wright as naval officer at Philadelphia, but reserved the right to reconsider if found desirable. Mention was made of an anonymous letter received by senators accusing Wright of having expressed gratification at Lincoln's death, and it was stated that under ordinary circumstances no attention would be paid to such a communication, but that in this instance the writer had said that there were charges on file with the president's confidential secretary. Hence, it was suggested that investigation should be made as to the existence of these charges, which is to be done before the confirmation is officially announced.

A Decision Expected on Monday.

TRENTON, March 15.—The grand argument before the supreme court in the senate middle came to a close yesterday afternoon, after lasting for five days, and in which seven of the leading counsel before the bar of New Jersey have participated. The court gave no indication of what its decision might be, except that the chief justice stated after adjournment that nothing would be done before Monday, as the court would not hold any conference upon the matter before that time.

Lake Navigation Reopened.

BUFFALO, March 15.—The steamer G. G. Hadley started today for Toledo, to load with grain for Buffalo. This makes the opening of navigation just one month earlier than last year and the earliest opening on record.

FIGHT WITH A MOOSE.

A BATTLE TO THE DEATH WITH A GIANT OF THE FOREST.

A Bull Enraged by a Shot That Only Gored His Flank Fought Like a Fury—A Hunter's Canadian Experience Which He Would Not Care to Duplicate.

Within 30 hours' ride of Chicago, at Lake Temiscouata, a beautiful little sheet of water in the province of Quebec, is one of the finest hunting grounds in the world. It is a region abounding with deer, moose, caribou and other wild animals.

Dr. Charles Girard, an English physician who resides on the lake, had an adventure with a gigantic bull moose that rivals in excitement any of the blood curdling hunting stories which the wild west could furnish. One night a party of the doctor's friends arrived from Chicago and told him he must give them some hunting. Gippe Tippet, a French Canadian whose knowledge of woodcraft amounts to second nature, said that he had found tracks of a big moose on the shore of Lake Squatic. Lake Squatic is about 10 miles distant from Notre Dame du Lac.

At 8 o'clock the next morning the physician accompanied his guests, and they took their places in the birch bark canoe which had been provided for their accommodation. In the party were T. F. Plednow of La Crosse and George T. Howland of Chicago. Gippe Tippet and another guide accompanied the party.

After an hour's steady work the canoe detached from the lake into the Squatic river, where the high banks towered aloft fringed with oak and pine. Twenty minutes' hard paddling, and the voyagers emerged upon a broad sheet of water, the gently sloping shores of which were fringed with deep woods.

Enjoining the strictest silence upon the occupants of both canoes, the doctor directed the boatmen toward the left bank of the lake. Taking Mr. Plednow with him, Dr. Girard stepped out on the shore. Mr. Howland followed, accompanied by Gippe Tippet. All pushed at once quickly but silently forward. It was hardly daylight in the dense forest.

Suddenly, just as the party of four men reached the edge of an open glade, there was a queer sound heard.

"Youer! Youer!" It was the cry of the male moose calling to its mate. Instantly Gippe dropped on his knees, and putting two very dirty fingers almost entirely within his mouth gave forth the answering cry of the female: "Youer! Youer!"

From the direction of the sounds it seemed as if the animal was only a few yards right ahead. Every one was on the very tip-toe of expectation. It was Dr. Girard's wish to give his guests the first chance at a shot, and he moved forward and Howland to the front. As they crept quietly along through the underbrush skirting the glades the surface of a small green knoll was exposed against a background of gray sky for a moment. On the top of the knoll, with its splendid head erect and its great antlers branching aloft, was a superb bull moose. The doctor moved aside to permit Mr. Plednow to come up.

"Aim just below the shoulder," whispered the physician.

Plednow caught his breath and put his rifle up to his shoulder, where it seemed to stay for an eternity. At last he pulled the trigger. There was a loud report. The bull, struck below the shoulder, staggered a moment, and giving vent to a loud bellow of defiance turned around on his haunches. Mr. Plednow's bullet had merely scraped him. With a snort of rage and defiance, the infuriated animal charged down the slope.

"Scatter for your lives," shouted Gippe, at the same time plunging into the underbrush.

Plednow, however, though a bad shot, stood his ground. He looked as if he was entirely accustomed to encounters of the kind as he again raised his rifle.

"I have got another barrel," he said calmly.

The doctor was hardly the man to desert his guest in such an emergency, but he knew that the best shot in the world could not hit a charging moose in that kind of light. The next moment he had seized Plednow, who is a small man, around the waist, threw him over his shoulder and ran for his life, ran as one would think it impossible for a man to run burdened with a rifle and a fellow being. After the two came the moose, crashing through the bushes as if they were grass in a hayfield. There was a little hollow or depression half filled with dead leaves and branches, and into this crashed the doctor and his friend, and both fell. The next moment the moose was on top of them.

With one of its sharp fore feet firmly planted on Plednow's chest, when the blow had knocked unconscious, the moose endeavored to transfix him with its sharp antler points. Gippe and Howland both leveled their rifles, but mixed indiscriminately with moose and flying branches the doctor was seen engaged in a terrific hand to hand fight with the enraged animal. To shoot was out of the question.

In the fierce rush of the animal, which had sent Plednow and the doctor head over heels into the little hollow, the doctor's rifle had been sent skimming from his hand into the bushes. But it would have been a useless weapon in that close encounter. With one hand grasping the left antler of the moose close to its enormous head, with the other the plucky physician drew his long hunting knife and plunged it forward into the bull's shoulder. It missed making any kind of a wound that served to do more than doubly enrage the maddened animal. With a huge of its sharpened forefoot it struck the doctor just above the knee, crippling him for the moment and rolling him over like a log.

At this moment a bullet from Gippe's rifle struck the moose on the right flank, and in its desperate and headlong charge upon the fallen man it swerved slightly. As the moose reached him the doctor regained his feet and sprang on one side, but the giant antler caught him and tossed him on one side like a feather.

The next thing he knew he had the moose around the neck, and then he realized that the struggle must end soon, for he was becoming rapidly exhausted. Leaning far over, he slapped viciously at the animal and succeeded in severing the tendon Achilles in both its fore legs. The moose uttered a loud bellow and fell to its knees. Froth ran from its mouth, and its great red tongue dropped falling from its black lips.

Just then Gippe ran up, and placing the muzzle of his rifle against the animal's side pulled the trigger. When the doctor came to, Howland was lashing his face with water, and Gippe was cooking moose steaks over a fire in the little clearing. No bones were broken, but the animal had fallen clear over on the physician and bruised him badly.—Chicago Journal.

Photographers claim that they can take a picture of a rifle ball traveling at the rate of 3,000 feet per second.

An Easy Way to Economize.

A SHENANDOAH WOMAN'S METHOD OF SAVING THE DOLLARS.

New Clothing Made from Old by Diamond Dye—prising Dresses, suits and Wraps With No Exp. Use for New Material—Dressing Well With Little Money.

In these hard times a Shenandoah woman has found Diamond dyes the greatest help in economizing. With their air, her husband, her children and herself have dressed comfortably, although nearly all the clothing was old material, dyed over. Diamond dyes make such beautiful colors that goods dyed with them cannot be told from new. Any one can use them, as the directions are so plain and simple that no skill is needed. The color is there to stay, and will not wash, wear, or fade out.

Silk, cotton, wool, dresses, cloaks, stockings, feathers, laces, carpet rags, are all easily colored by Diamond dyes. They are specially prepared for home use, and the makers guarantee them the strongest and fastest of all dyes. Use a package and see how easy it is to dye at home. The Diamond are the original package dyes, and no one should accept any of the inferior substitutes that are sometimes kept by dealers for a larger profit. Many of the dyestuffs in Diamond dyes are original discoveries that simplify the work, and cannot be had in other dyes. Insist on having the Diamond, and you will always be successful in home-dyeing.
